While world-leading science is performed regularly at LCLS, we believe that the full potential of this source won’t be attained without careful design of the new user interfaces planned for LCLS-II. I will discuss our efforts to systematically study how scientists from different scientific disciplines, backgrounds and cultures currently use the instruments during real experiments, to design and build new user interfaces, and to explore the impact of new interfaces on the experimental results.